

Highlights

- Ten civilizational scenarios are simulated over a 1000-year window
- Duty cycle quantifies the fraction of time a civilization is active
- Recovery fraction and depletion rate are the strongest resilience levers
- Intermittent activity may explain the apparent absence of alien signals
- Sensitivity analysis identifies nonlinear thresholds in collapse dynamics